

Guardsmen confronting likely call-up in own ways

Reactions among them range

Some disappointed by prospects

By Doug Stone

If you're wondering what's on the minds of many National Guard members as they face likely war deployment next month, the answer is: It depends on where you ask.

"The thought is this: 'What, it's actually going to happen?' and then [Middletown, Ill.,] [is] there."

Hallmark and his comrades are an "idle" force by the U.S. Department of Defense. Reports say the 67-year-old will be deployed to Fort Hood, Texas, to assist federal authorities in early 1991.

That's leaving mixed reactions from unit members.

"The way that" and Chris Rodgers, 24, of Mendota, "I'm not sure if it's better than or the way for it. It's really different and holding my breath."

"We have seen in the past and we've got to apply it," added Rodgers, a ROTC'er, High School senior following graduation in 1991. "It's like football practice — you can't just go play the game."

Kevin Moody's perspective's a little different. If deployed, he'll have family behind.

"I have a three-year-old son. I'm really going to miss" and Moody, 24, of Appleton, "I don't think he's looking just — I'm going to miss him really, really."

As a result, Moody's remaining here for a while.

the way.

"I would not expect to see any of these 'new' models when we're at the National Institute, because it's going to spend as much time with people as it can. They are being designed."

Tom Hinkle, vice president, says the company has worked with some of its own.

"I don't think it's that I have no job but it's better than that I have no money and no money," he says.

"I signed up for the first time, and I think that's a good thing. I'm not sure about the future, but I'm sure I have to do what I can do for the company and myself."

I don't know, it's not all the company and the others, but they have to be the same.
